

Taylor Shien Launches DermaClear Skin, a Skincare Brand Born from Personal Breakthroughs

Entrepreneur Taylor Shien shares the journey behind DermaClear Skin — a clean, effective skincare line built for breakout-prone skin and backed by real results.

ATLANTA, GA, UNITED STATES, July 2, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Taylor Shien, founder of DermaClear Skin, is bringing a new voice to the skincare space — one rooted in clarity, transparency, and personal transformation. After years of navigating her own skin challenges, Shien launched DermaClear Skin with a mission to simplify skincare for people who struggle with breakouts and sensitivity.

DermaClear Skin's formulations focus on clean, non-toxic ingredients, and have already generated buzz for their minimal yet results-driven routines. The line was born out of necessity: Shien had no intention of launching a skincare brand — until her phone began ringing nonstop.

In late 2023, a fraudulent company began circulating Facebook ads for a product called DermaClear Skin Tag Remover. The problem? The scam used Shien's business name, mimicked her label design, and led thousands of angry customers to her inbox — assuming she was the seller.

Instead of folding, Shien decided to flip the chaos into a marketing moment. “The calls haven’t stopped, but now that people are already Googling DermaClear, it’s time to show them the real one,” she says. “The one that’s actually rooted in results.”

DermaClear Skin is now positioned to turn misdirected attention into actual impact — with a loyal, growing base and a direct-to-consumer focus. The brand is committed to staying small, personal, and evidence-based — never riding trends, only results.
