- The demand for wearable injectors increased during the Covid-19 pandemic with advent of home-based treatment and to monitor health conditions.
- As the resources were shifted for treatment of increased Covid-infected patients, the procedures involving wearable injectors were delayed. Moreover, many procedures were postponed to avoid cross-contamination.

In terms of type, the on-body segment accounted for the biggest share in 2020, accounting for more than half of the market for wearable injectors. It is anticipated that this segment will maintain its dominance throughout the forecast period. Additionally, from 2021 to 2030, this market is anticipated to exhibit the greatest CAGR of 6.6%. This is because on-body injectors have advanced, chronic diseases are on the increase, and administration is simple. The off-body segment is examined in the study as well.

The semi-reusable market, which contributed to more than half of the wearable injectors market globally in 2020, had the biggest share based on usage, and it is anticipated that it will continue to hold the top spot throughout the forecast period. Diabetes prevalence is on the increase, and reusable containers are in high demand.
