Marcos, Seguin, and Blanco. Torrential rains exceeding 12 inches in hours caused the river to surge 26-40 feet, and with more heavy rain forecast for the Hill Country today, the situation remains dire. Wildlife and game, including deer and livestock, are at risk, displaced by the rising waters, while the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department works tirelessly to rescue stranded animals. President

Donald Trump and Governor Greg Abbott are mobilizing a robust response. Trump has signed a major disaster declaration, unlocking federal aid and deploying the U.S. Coast Guard, which has rescued over 850 people. Abbott has declared a Day of Prayer and is surging state resources, including the National Guard and Texas Department of Public Safety, with over 400 first responders and 100 vehicles active in Kerr County. The Cajun Navy, a volunteer rescue group, has joined the effort, navigating treacherous waters to save stranded residents, including families like Erin Burgess, who survived by clinging to trees. Despite criticism over National Weather Service cuts, Trump and Abbott are coordinating to upgrade warning systems, though the focus remains on immediate rescue and recovery.
