a trio Managing Partners who head the company's three new regions, recently reorganized from four.

"Our Partners and Fractional CMOs and CSOs are focused on making big things happen for clients," stated Art Saxby, CEO Founder and Principal. "As a Managing Partner, Chuck takes on a critical leadership role to ensure client success as Chief Outsiders continues to scale."

A key element of Chief Outsiders' success is understanding what each person in the organization loves to do. According to company leaders, making Dushman a Managing Partner recognizes his passion for excellence and contribution to client growth and Chief Outsiders business development.

Hence, Dushman will now leverage the Managing Partner role with his personal strengths to keep the focus on client success as the company's network of executive level sales and marketing consultants grows.

Chief Outsiders Managing Partner Role

According to Chief Outsiders' leadership, the Managing Partner's role is vital to the firm's growth. Managing Partners are responsible for driving business growth within their region. This involves building and maintaining strong relationships with key clients to foster long-term partnerships and capitalizing on company sponsored development opportunities and regional events.

Managing Partners also work collaboratively with the firm's Area Managing Partners, CMOs, and CSOs to provide Regional and Corporate leadership, providing feedback, setting expectations, and hiring top talent within the region. They also participate in weekly leadership calls and quarterly off-site meetings to craft the strategic direction of the organization.
