Our pet-friendly update at Cromwell Manor Inn blends Hudson Valley history with modern travel needs, welcoming guests and their pets to create lasting memories.”

to revive historic inns and motels in Upstate New York, Cromwell Manor Inn has introduced pet-friendly accommodations, enhancing its appeal while preserving its 19th-century heritage. This update comes as preservation efforts gain momentum statewide, with experts noting a rise in adaptive reuse projects that transform aging structures into viable destinations for contemporary visitors.

The initiative addresses the evolving needs of travelers seeking inclusive, history-infused stays in areas like the Hudson Valley, where tourism recovery is accelerating post-pandemic disruptions.

Upstate New York's hospitality sector is witnessing a notable revival of historic properties, driven by preservation awards and recognition programs in 2025. According to recent announcements from Historic Hotels of America, 25 properties nationwide were honored for best adaptive reuse, highlighting how non-traditional buildings—such as former residences or warehouses—are being repurposed into hotels without losing their cultural significance. In New York, this trend is amplified by state initiatives, including the 2025 Historic Preservation Awards, which celebrated diverse projects from rustic farms to urban warehouses, emphasizing community-driven efforts to safeguard architectural legacies. The Preservation League of New York's Seven to Save list for 2025-2026 further underscores this, featuring sites across urban and rural landscapes that represent multiple eras of the state's history.

Tourism data supports the timeliness of these revivals. New York State anticipates visitor numbers to reach over 64 million annually by year's end, matching pre-2020 levels, with a 15% increase in interest for experiential accommodations in regions like the Hudson Valley.

Nationally, the hospitality industry projects 300,000 to 400,000 room renovations and conversions in 2025, many of which involve historic sites, to meet the demand for sustainable and immersive travel options. This shift addresses longstanding issues in historic inns, such as outdated facilities that deter modern guests, while boosting local economies through increased occupancy, which rose by 20% in early 2025 for similar properties in Upstate areas.

Cromwell Manor Inn exemplifies this trend through its recent adaptation. Initially constructed in 1820 as a brick mansion in the Greek Revival style, the property features the Manor House, which boasts nine guest rooms, and an adjacent 1764 House, the site's original structure dating back to pre-Revolutionary times. Situated in Cornwall, the inn has long served as a gateway to the Hudson Valley's natural and cultural attractions. Still, updates like the pet-friendly policy, implemented in May 2025, address a key barrier: the exclusion of pet owners, who represent a growing segment of travelers. This change enables guests to bring well-behaved pets into designated rooms, aligning with broader industry trends toward inclusivity and responding to reports that pet-inclusive travel has increased by 30% in the Northeast.

The adaptation solves practical challenges in historic preservation, such as integrating modern expectations like pet accommodations without compromising architectural integrity. Guests benefit from enhanced accessibility to nearby sites, including the Storm King Art Center, just five minutes away, Jones Farm next door, West Point Military Academy within 15 minutes, and Woodbury Common Premium Outlets, all within an hour's drive from Manhattan. The inn's grounds, surrounded by gardens and forests, support activities like hiking, kayaking, and seasonal events, contributing to the region's appeal as a year-round destination.

Key aspects of the inn's role in this revival include:

- Heritage Preservation: Maintenance of original features like period furnishings and fireplaces in guest rooms, ensuring the property retains its historical essence while accommodating groups for events or retreats.
- Modern Inclusivity: The pet-friendly addition, which includes guidelines for pet behavior and dedicated spaces, caters to families and individuals who travel with animals, thereby expanding the inn's reach.
- Community Impact: Proximity to local attractions fosters economic ties, with visitors supporting nearby breweries, golf courses, and cultural sites, aiding in the broader revitalization of Cornwall and the Hudson Valley.
- Sustainability Focus: Emphasis on natural surroundings and low-impact updates, mirroring statewide trends where preserved historic sites reduce the need for new construction, promoting environmental stewardship.
- Event Adaptability: Upgraded spaces for weddings, corporate gatherings, and wellness activities, such as sunset yoga sessions held on-site, reflecting a 25% rise in demand for versatile historic venues in 2025.

These elements highlight how historic inns, such as Cromwell Manor, are navigating the balance between tradition and innovation. In a landscape dominated by chain hotels, such revivals offer travelers a sense of connection to the past, evoking stories of resilience from the Civil War era to the present day. As Upstate New York sees new hotel openings and restorations—including four properties named among the world's best in 2025 by Esquire—the focus on adaptive reuse ensures these sites remain relevant, drawing visitors who value authenticity over uniformity.

The trend extends beyond individual properties, with conferences like the 2025 NY Statewide Preservation Conference providing platforms for sharing best practices in revival efforts. Properties on lists like Historic Hotels of America's "Most Romantic Hotels" further illustrate how these inns are adapting to themes like romance or wellness, thereby broadening their cultural footprint.

"This adaptation reflects a commitment to evolving with traveler needs while honoring the property's deep roots in the Hudson Valley, contributing to the area's ongoing cultural preservation," said the owner of Cromwell Manor Inn.

"A resurgence in historic inn revivals is vital for maintaining New York's architectural diversity, as these projects not only save buildings but also enrich community narratives and tourism," added a representative from Historic Hotels of America.
