I use every opportunity—on the mound or in business—to create real change. Giving back isn't optional; it's a responsibility to uplift those without a voice or resources.”

Daniel Neiditch

Recognized across the country for his leadership in both luxury real estate and humanitarian causes, Daniel Neiditch is using these ceremonial appearances to draw attention to issues affecting underserved communities, especially children living in poverty. Previous ceremonial pitches have taken place at iconic ballparks such as Fenway Park in Boston, Guaranteed Rate Field in Chicago, Busch Stadium in St. Louis, Citizens Bank Park in Philadelphia, and Target Field in Minneapolis.

Neiditch's most recent appearance in Washington D.C.

further cements his reputation as a national figure who is not only building skyscrapers—but also building hope.

As the President of River 2 River Realty, Daniel Neiditch has played a key role in shaping New York City's luxury property market. He is best known for developing The Atelier Condo, a striking 46-story skyscraper on the west side of Manhattan. With its cutting-edge amenities, eco-conscious design, and panoramic views of the Hudson River, the Atelier has become a landmark property and an embodiment of Dan Neiditch's forward-thinking vision.

But while his achievements in New York real estate are impressive, they are just one part of his larger mission. Neiditch has become equally known for his tireless work as a philanthropist, championing causes like education equity, affordable housing, pediatric healthcare, and homelessness prevention. In fact, much of his philanthropic work addresses the very inequalities he has witnessed growing up and working in one of the world's most dynamic cities.

Whether it's delivering meals to homeless shelters, funding children's hospitals, or creating transitional housing programs for at-risk families, Daniel Neiditch is using his success in real estate as a tool for social change.

For Daniel Neiditch, throwing out the ceremonial first pitch is not about publicity—it's about purpose. Each pitch is paired with a cause, community initiative, or local outreach event that brings attention to a pressing issue. In Washington D.C., a city deeply intertwined with national policy and economic disparity, Neiditch used the platform to focus on civil liberties and youth empowerment.

He partnered with actor and activist Jason Alexander to host a roundtable on child advocacy and systemic inequality, bringing together stakeholders from both the private and nonprofit sectors.

These conversations are more than symbolic; they're designed to create actionable solutions and cross-sector collaboration.

Through his first pitch campaign, Daniel Neiditch is not just stepping onto the mound—he's stepping into the lives of people who too often go unheard and unseen.

Part of what makes Dan Neiditch's efforts so impactful is his ability to bring other high-profile advocates into the fold. Over the years, he has collaborated with well-known figures such as Evander Holyfield, Daymond John, Sugar Ray Leonard, Anthony Edwards, and Darryl Strawberry to amplify his outreach.

These partnerships create more than media moments; they serve as catalysts for tangible change. By leveraging celebrity influence, Neiditch is able to increase visibility for causes like youth mentorship, educational access, and mental health resources. Whether he's hosting a gala, moderating a panel, or organizing a grassroots initiative, Neiditch consistently puts others front and center—ensuring that the message is always louder than the spotlight.

Housing insecurity has long been one of the causes closest to Daniel Neiditch's heart. Through River 2 River Realty and his personal philanthropic endeavors, he has helped create transitional housing programs designed to give struggling families not just shelter—but a pathway to long-term stability.

Unlike short-term or emergency housing solutions, Neiditch's programs are focused on sustainable outcomes: job placement, education access, healthcare, and financial literacy. These multi-dimensional approaches ensure that families aren't just surviving but are positioned to thrive.

Neiditch has also advocated for public-private partnerships that bring together government agencies, nonprofit organizations, and private developers to create scalable housing solutions in urban areas.

Daniel Neiditch's belief in the power of sports as a tool for unity and inspiration is another theme that runs deep in his work. In addition to ceremonial pitches, he has organized charity boxing matches and sporting events to raise money for children battling cancer, rare diseases, and life-threatening injuries.

By connecting philanthropy with athletics, Dan Neiditch taps into the emotional power of sport to rally people around a shared goal. These events not only generate donations but create communities of support for families in crisis.

In each city where he throws the first pitch, Daniel Neiditch ensures that the moment is tied to a local cause, whether that means funding school supplies, underwriting youth sports leagues, or partnering with local hospitals.

Daniel Neiditch is part of a new generation of business leaders who believe that financial success and social responsibility must go hand in hand. He doesn't just donate money—he donates his time, influence, and network. His approach to philanthropy mirrors his approach to real estate: strategic, measurable, and built to last.

Through River 2 River Realty, Neiditch demonstrates how businesses can serve as engines for community revitalization. From developing luxury buildings that integrate green technologies to ensuring that part of his revenue goes toward social programs, Neiditch is setting a new standard for what corporate leadership can and should look like.

With six MLB ceremonial first pitches already under his belt and more scheduled, Daniel Neiditch shows no signs of slowing down. Each pitch marks the beginning of a new campaign—an opportunity to reach new cities, build new coalitions, and continue his mission of giving back.
