Mental health challenges have reached alarming levels, impacting individuals, families, and communities worldwide. With many still struggling to access adequate care, innovative approaches are needed to address this growing crisis. Physicians Research Group, renowned for its expertise in managing clinical trials, and Indiana Health Group, recognized as one of the largest private mental health practices in the Midwest, are joining forces to drive meaningful change.

One of the central goals of this partnership is to bridge the gap between cutting-edge research and the patients who can benefit most. By combining PRG's extensive experience in clinical trial management with IHG's robust patient network and expertise in mental health care, the collaboration aims to provide individuals with access to promising treatments and therapies through clinical trials. This effort will empower patients with new options and provide invaluable data to further scientific understanding and innovation.

The partnership will also focus on identifying and implementing solutions to improve mental health care delivery. By leveraging data-driven insights, clinical expertise, and community engagement, PRG and IHG aim to create a more inclusive and accessible mental health ecosystem. The organizations are committed to addressing barriers to care, including social stigma and systemic inequities, and promoting a culture where mental health is prioritized as an essential element of overall well-being.

“This partnership with Indiana Health Group represents a significant advancement in our mission to tackle the mental health crisis head-on,” said Robert Wallace, Founder and CEO of Physicians Research Group. “By expanding access to cutting-edge clinical trials, we’re creating new pathways to care and delivering hope to individuals and families affected by mental health challenges.”

Working in collaboration with Physician’s Research Group, Indiana Health Group continues in its efforts to bring cutting edge treatment options to our patients and our community. “We are excited to partner with PRG to provide Hoosiers with the opportunity to participate in clinical medical research that advances our knowledge and our ability to offer new, safe and effective treatments for a variety of mental health conditions,” said Dr. Christopher Bojrab, President of Indiana Health Group.
