Judges described Professional.me as “a category-defining innovation” with “genuine technical depth,” built on a proprietary AI infrastructure that “challenges long-standing limitations of résumé parsing, keyword filtering, and siloed HR tools.” One judge called the platform “one of the most complete and impactful uses of AI I’ve seen,” while another praised its commitment to fairness, noting:

“They’ve paid attention to accuracy and context, which matters a lot in hiring data. Particularly noteworthy is the platform’s attention to reducing bias and increasing fairness.”

"We built Professional.me to solve one of the biggest bottlenecks in hiring: the disconnect between potential and opportunity. This award validates our belief that technology can help close that gap- globally, at scale," said Ryan Adams, CEO of Professional.me.

With more than 300,000 professional profiles created and 50+ employers onboarded in its first year, Professional.me has quickly become a standout in the global HR tech landscape. Judges also highlighted the platform's rapid traction, inclusive team spanning 15+ nationalities, and ability to "replace outdated résumé-based hiring with structured talent intelligence."

This Stevie Award adds to a growing list of accolades for the company.
