Since going live, Amparo has significantly increased operational efficiency across the entire policy lifecycle — from application to payment processing. This transformation has streamlined internal processes, reduced manual intervention, and enhanced operational performance, positioning Amparo as a leader in insurance technology adoption.

Partnering with ChainThat has been a significant upgrade for the organization. In the last 12 months, we have seen at least 20% efficiency gains in our operational processes because of BPA."

Pushan Sen Gupta - Co-Founder, Amparo Insurance

Pushan Sen Gupta, Co-Founder of Amparo, commented:

"Partnering with ChainThat has been a significant upgrade for the organization. In the last 12 months, the BPA platform has enabled us to automate critical workflows, issue policies more quickly, and handle post-bind processes efficiently. The results have been immediate and impactful across all functions – underwriting, sales, customer service, finance, and backend operations. We see at least 20% efficiency gains in our operational processes because of BPA, and the ease of configurability and extensibility of their platform means that we can make continuous improvements to enhance our performance even further."

The implementation of BPA has helped Amparo streamline its quote-to-bind operations and reduce reliance on manual interventions. By allowing greater control over configuration and product changes, the platform supports Amparo's ability to adapt quickly to evolving business needs.

Vikas Acharya, CEO of ChainThat, added:
"It's incredibly rewarding to see our platform delivering tangible value for Amparo. From day one, our focus has been to enable our clients to move faster and operate with confidence. This reflects the strength of our collaboration and the power of BPA to support insurers with unique market needs."
The partnership continues to evolve, with both organisations committed to ongoing innovation and operational excellence.
