

In-Depth Review: Noblie Custom Knives Unveils New Damascus Knives Series

NEW YORK, NY, UNITED STATES, August 5, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Noblie Custom Knives, the knife maker known for turning metallurgy into fine art, has rolled out its ambitious Damascus steel collection to date. The new series gathers more than a dozen one-off blades—hand forged, carved, and finished entirely in-house—and places them under a single, easy-to-shop banner on the company's web store. Prices stretch from $590 for a small and simple model to $4,700 for the museum-grade custom Damascus knife, giving both first-time buyers and seasoned collectors room to explore.

Damascus, Dialed Up

Every knife in the release starts as a billet of hand-layered Damascus steel. Pattern counts exceed 300 layers on several pieces, delivering the swirling, topographical look that first made Damascus legendary for both beauty and bite. Blades undergo a 59-61 HRC heat-treat, balancing hardness with field-worthy toughness.

Stand-Out Models

Beluga Damascus Knife — A sleek, fish-themed fixed blade that marries silver-plated brass fittings to an ebony grip. Overall length is a compact 225 mm, making it an approachable daily carry for owners who actually use their art pieces.

Panther Damascus Knife — A 285 mm statement knife whose pommel erupts into a snarling feline head, hand-sculpted and silver-coated. The blade's thick 5 mm spine makes it as capable as it is collectible.

Hidden-Tang Mosaic Damascus Knife — For pattern-weld connoisseurs: a kaleidoscopic mosaic Damascus blade paired with a sculpted brass guard—true forge sorcery for the price.

“Functional Sculpture,” Says the Maker

“We wanted a lineup where every knife looks gallery-ready but still feels right in a hunter’s hand,” explains Aleks Nemtcev, Noblie’s lead bladesmith. “That means real edge geometry, real heat-treat, and presentation finishes that hold up when the knife is actually used.”

Each knife ships in a walnut display box with cotton gloves, a stitched leather sheath (where applicable), and a signed certificate of authenticity.

Availability

The Damascus Series is live now at nobliescustomknives.com on a first-come basis. Because every piece is a one-off, sold items will not be restocked; however, Noblie accepts commissions for bespoke variants.
