With a mission that goes beyond great food, the company has launched GeneralTsos.org, a platform dedicated to supporting community organizations, minority-owned businesses, and immigrant entrepreneurs.

We believe success is about more than serving great food — it's about lifting up the community we serve.”

Patrick Cheng, CEO of General Tso's Restaurant & Catering

In recent months, General Tso's Restaurant & Catering has:

Donated meals to the Georgia Minority Supplier Development Council (GMSDC) and the DeKalb Chamber of Commerce for networking events and community programs.

Announced plans to join the Cobb Chamber of Commerce to expand outreach and business engagement across Metro Atlanta.

Participated in multiple events supporting small businesses, cultural celebrations, and educational initiatives, as documented through its nonprofit project photos and impact reports.

“Our kitchen is built for efficiency, but our vision is built for impact,” said Patrick Cheng, CEO of General Tso’s Restaurant & Catering. “Whether we’re serving corporate clients or supporting the community through donations and partnerships, we believe success means lifting others along the way. GeneralTsos.org is our way of making that mission permanent.”

The company’s NextGen Impact Georgia initiative is also underway, aimed at empowering non-native English-speaking entrepreneurs with business education, operational resources, and networking opportunities. This program aligns with the company’s long-term vision of national expansion while maintaining a strong local impact.

General Tso’s Restaurant & Catering community involvement is part of a broader strategy to connect with corporate partners, local leaders, and community members. By integrating its operations with nonprofit outreach, the company is setting a new standard for how small businesses can influence both the marketplace and the communities they serve.
