education is evolving, and one young pioneer is leading the way. Ayann Patel, a determined 9-year-old with a passion for finance, proudly announces the launch of a free online trading and financial literacy course designed for children, parents, and beginners eager to build a solid foundation in money management. This valuable resource is now available at <https://www.ayannpatel.com/>.

In today’s rapidly changing world, financial literacy is more important than ever. However, many educational systems still fall short of equipping young people with essential knowledge about budgeting, investing, and trading. Recognizing this critical need, Ayann created an engaging and age-appropriate curriculum that demystifies finance for young learners and newcomers alike.

“My world is always changing, and the future can feel uncertain,” Ayann said. “But financial education stays valuable no matter what. I wanted to help other kids and families understand how money works and build good habits early—starting with pocket money and growing into lifelong savings and investments.”

Ayann’s financial journey began early. At just 4 years old, guided by his parents, he began saving his allowance and exploring stocks and investments. This early exposure ignited a passion that led to months of learning and eventually the creation of his own comprehensive financial literacy course.

With his family’s support, Ayann designed the course to be both educational and fun. It covers fundamental topics such as budgeting essentials, smart saving techniques, investing basics, and a beginner-friendly overview of the stock market. Through video lessons, quizzes, and practical exercises, the course encourages active participation and reinforces important concepts.

Key Features of the Course:

Completely Free: All lessons and materials are accessible with no fees, registration, or submission of personal information, making the course accessible and secure worldwide.

Designed for Kids & Beginners: Content is presented in simple language and uses interactive features suited for young learners and newcomers.

Privacy and Safety: The course does not collect email addresses, phone numbers, or personal data, prioritizing safety for children and peace of mind for parents.

Family-Oriented Learning: Parents are encouraged to explore the materials with their children to foster financial learning and conversation at home.

The course, titled “Pocket Money to Portfolio – Learn How Money Works and Grows,” addresses the widespread gap in financial education many families face. Traditional schooling often lacks comprehensive finance instruction, leaving children unprepared for real-world money decisions. Ayann’s course fills this void by providing foundational skills that complement classroom learning.

This initiative aligns with inspiring evidence from youth investing programs and competitions. Programs like The Stock Market Game, sponsored by the SIFMA Foundation, demonstrate that even elementary school students can grasp complex financial concepts and excel in simulated investing. Stories of young winners prove that financial skills are attainable and important for all ages.

Ayann’s mission is to empower young learners worldwide with confident, responsible money-management skills. By making this knowledge freely available, he hopes to inspire children to take control of their financial futures.
