Author Rebecca Bush says, "'Dyslexia and Your Newly Diagnosed Child' was born out of thousands of conversations with overwhelmed, heartbroken parents who were asking, 'What now?' They were desperate to help their child, so I created a clear, calming guide to walk with them from uncertainty to empowered action."

The book has been called "a must-read for any parent seeking compassionate and practical guidance," by Mallory Lattanze, M.Ed., LDT, CALT, president of the Houston Branch of the International Dyslexia Association.

Lattanze adds, "She [Bush] leaves no stone unturned in helping parents become confident, informed supporters of their child with dyslexia."

While a diagnosis can bring clarity, it also raises new questions. This guide helps caregivers support their child's learning while addressing real-life challenges, such as reading, writing, routines, listening skills, and friendships—all of which can be impacted by dyslexia.

Backed by nearly 20 years of experience and global impact in the education field, Bush delivers evidence-based tools and holistic support to help parents move from confusion to confident advocacy. Her journey into dyslexia education began in classrooms across the globe, including teaching roles in the U.S., Honduras, Brazil, and Hong Kong, which led Bush to pursue dual master's degrees, advanced literacy training, and credentials as a Certified Academic Language Therapist, Licensed Dyslexia Therapist, and Certified Reading Specialist.

As the founder of Lead Changes—an educational consulting company dedicated to helping families and schools improve literacy outcomes through evidence-based support—Bush is the creator of the Five Shifts Framework™ and the Dyslexia Driver's Seat™ program. Bush leads the company in providing evidence-based intervention, personalized parent coaching, and strategic school consulting.

Bush says, "Every child deserves a roadmap that works for them, and every parent deserves to feel capable of leading the way."
