The appointment marks a significant step for New Leaf Technologies as it expands its footprint across Africa and into global markets. The company, headquartered in Johannesburg, has carved out a strong position as one of the continent's most innovative digital learning providers.

"Jonathan's appointment represents an exciting chapter for us," said Michael Hanly, Managing Director of New Leaf Technologies. "His experience at Litmos and deep knowledge of the global eLearning landscape will be invaluable as we evolve our offering and extend our reach."

Hill's role at Litmos, one of the world's best-known learning platforms, saw him spearhead strategic learning initiatives and client success programmes across international markets. Now, as part of New Leaf's leadership team, he will focus on global business development, strategic alliances, and the advancement of digital learning technologies.

Speaking on his appointment, Hill said: "New Leaf has built a strong reputation not only in Africa

New Leaf has built a strong reputation not only in Africa but globally, delivering real value through learning. I'm delighted to join a team that's pushing boundaries and setting new standards"
