automotive diagnostic scan tools industry. Automotive scan devices, which rely on data garnered from sensors, microchips, and integrated processors, are implemented to swiftly and accurately identify trouble spots in specific areas. As the volume of vehicles escalates, the demand is likely to rise for automotive diagnostic tools, for increasing efficiency and speed of diagnosing vehicle faults by repair and maintenance firms. For example, as per the European Automobile Manufacturers Association based in Belgium, in 2023, the world's motor vehicle production was 85.4 million units - a remarkable 5.7% spike from 2021. Moreover, in February 2022, Brand Finance plc, a British brand evaluation company, stated that in 2022, roughly 78 million units were sold in the automotive sector, registering a substantial surge of 10% compared to both 2021. Thus, the increasing vehicle production and sales fuel the growth of the automotive diagnostic scan tool market.
