How much does a dental crown cost in Auckland?

According to the New Zealand Dental Association's 2024 fee survey, dental crown costs in the city typically range from $1,500 to $2,800, with variations influenced by materials, treatment complexity, and practice location.

Material choice is one of the primary cost drivers. Porcelain and zirconia crowns generally sit at the higher end of the scale due to their aesthetics and advanced manufacturing, while porcelain-fused-to-metal crowns may be more affordable. Location also plays a role, with clinics in premium suburbs such as Remuera or Ponsonby often charging more than those in outer suburbs.

Patients should also be aware of potential additional costs. These may include the initial consultation, diagnostic X-rays, temporary crown placement, and follow-up appointments. If a root canal is required before crown fitting, the total treatment price may increase by $1,200–$2,000. Some dental practices bundle these services into a single fee, while others list them separately.

Same-day crown technology, such as CEREC, often falls within the same price range as traditional crowns but offers added convenience by eliminating the need for temporary crowns and a second visit. Many Auckland practices now offer payment plans or financing, allowing patients to spread the cost over 6–24 months.

While it's advisable to compare quotes from multiple providers, Dr Richards advises that the lowest price isn't always the best value. "Experience, material quality, and the warranty offered can make a significant difference in the longevity and appearance of a crown," he says.
