LONGWOOD, FL, UNITED STATES, August 19, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Many homeowners in Central Florida feel relieved when the weather is clear and sunny. However, the team at John Keller Roofing wants to remind them that roof maintenance is still important, even in summer. Roofing pros suggest checking and maintaining roofs regularly, no matter the season. This keeps homes and businesses safe from damage down the road.

Most people only think about their roofs after a storm has blown through or when a pesky leak makes it impossible to ignore. However, John Keller Roofing emphasizes that the best time to think about your roof is during good weather, not bad. Florida summers are calm, but they still have roofing risks. Heat, UV rays, and afternoon showers can quietly compromise shingles, metal panels, and other materials if left unchecked.

The summer months are an ideal time to address roofing issues for several reasons:

Prepare Before the Storms: Catching and fixing damage during good weather helps homeowners avoid leaks and costly repairs when hurricane season begins.

Sun Damage: The intense heat and UV rays of summer cause wear and tear on roofing materials, including curling shingles and cracking tiles.

Energy Costs: Damaged roofs can drive up energy bills due to poor insulation, leading to higher cooling costs.

Regular summer maintenance helps homeowners spot issues early. It also keeps roofs ready for Florida's storm season.
