“Our intention with these programs is to provide our clients with more than just a fleeting transformation. We are investing in continued process improvement. We are talking about ongoing, agile continuous process improvement as the organization changes," said Nikhil Agarwal, Founder of BPX. "With SAP at the core, these initiatives are empowering organizations to transition from a reactive state to a proactive one."

Through the last year BPX has been piloting their SAP Process Improvement Initiatives with some of the leading and respected brands and businesses. The initiatives that BPX led saw measurable improvements in productivity, compliance, and cost efficiencies. In retail, we heard of brands reducing their lead times from order - to - cash cycle. There are healthcare brands that have seen a considerable improvement in their patient data workflows. Across industries and verticals, BPX has its process initiatives already making an impact across its client base at scale.

Rupal Agarwal, Co-founder of BPX commented, "This is now a reflection of our view that transformation is a journey, not a destination. The SAP improvement programs are industry - specific and help organizations rethink and continuously improve the way they do business independently of size or complexity."

BPX's approach also includes elements of knowledge transfer and change management for the purpose of preparing internal teams to own and amplify process improvements as time progresses. Organizations may better enable their health internal capabilities to enable momentum while aligning SAP capabilities with updated market or customer expectations.
