From the Back Cover:

All families have secrets - some more than others. Sometimes it can take a generation or more for them to surface into the light of day. On occasion, however, they stay buried forever. At the very least, secrets shroud embarrassment or shame, but then there are those things that are much darker and nefarious. And so it is with both the Eastford and Sinclair families. Brock Eastford is a reticent clairvoyant who gets more than he ever bargained for in this life as he is juggling his present problems with those of his family's past. This is further complicated by his chance entanglement in the serious issues of another family. It is the journey of a young man who comes of age in the late 1960s at warp speed contending with obstacles in his path at every turn.

About the Author:

J.T. Church was born and raised on a mid-twentieth century Connecticut family dairy farm, which he says afforded him both a unique and demanding childhood. He later attended a private New England boarding school where two rather influential faculty members inspired him to write. One of those English teachers went on to author thirteen books.

After college, he spent several decades in the corporate world where, among other things like manufacturing, product research & development, and sales, he did both technical and marketing writing.

Now retired, he has written an unpublished memoir about his many experiences in boarding school that he says was a necessity, not a choice. This is his first work of fiction.

He has a BA, an MBA, and also holds fourteen United States Patents. He and his wife Nancy now alternate seasons between homes in Tennessee and Florida.
