

Dunham House founder announces plans for national memorial to honor service members killed during Global War on Terror

A new national memorial to honor America's fallen warriors is taking shape in the heart of the Midwest – and this one has a deadline.

OMAHA, NE, UNITED STATES, August 20, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- A new national memorial to honor America's fallen warriors is taking shape in the heart of the Midwest – and this one has a deadline.

"I'm not going to wait 10 years for a memorial to be built," said retired U.S. Marine Corps Colonel John Folsom, Executive Director of Dunham House. "It's going to be built now, and it's going to be built here at Dunham House."

Today, Folsom laid out plans to construct a permanent national memorial honoring the more than 6,500 U.S. service members who were killed in action or died of wounds in named operations between October 2001 and August 26, 2021– including Operation Enduring Freedom, Operation Iraqi Freedom, and other missions connected to the post-9/11 wars.

A Nation's Promise Etched in Stone

The memorial will be constructed using Sunset Granite quarried in South Dakota, with each name individually engraved into the stone.

"It's fitting that the names are etched into granite," Folsom said. "Granite is formed under intense heat and pressure, which makes it strong and resilient. It is emblematic of our nature as a people – and especially those who swear to defend our country against all enemies, foreign and domestic."

At the center of the project is a stark reminder that time matters. "The Nation which forgets its Defenders will itself be forgotten," Folsom added.

The Memorial's Home: Dunham House

When completed, the memorial – with an estimated cost of $2.5 million and fundraising already underway – will sit at the front entrance of Dunham House, the nation's first long-term residential facility built specifically for combat-wounded veterans who have suffered catastrophic wounds, such as multiple amputations and traumatic brain injuries (TBIs).

The 27,000-square-foot home – which will provide housing, healthcare and community to 30 severely combat-wounded veterans – is currently under construction in Omaha and is scheduled to open in Spring 2026.

"These brave soldiers will finally have a community of their own where they can live with the dignity that they so rightfully deserve," added Colonel Folsom.

Why This Memorial, and Why Now?

The memorial and the house it fronts are the culmination of a career of service – and a response to what Colonel Folsom, who also founded Wounded Warriors Family Support in 2003, believes is one of the most overlooked consequences of modern war.

As a former CH-46 helicopter pilot, Folsom coordinated casualty evacuations in southwestern al Anbar province while deployed to Iraq in 2005. Since Vietnam, advances in trauma care and faster medevac helicopter response times have significantly improved battlefield survival rates –but surviving catastrophic wounds comes with its own long-term crisis: where do these veterans go once their families can no longer care for them?

Currently, many of these veterans are placed in elderly nursing homes, a mismatch that Folsom calls unacceptable. Dunham House, and the memorial in front of it, is his answer.

Honoring the Fallen with a Name That Matters

Dunham House is named in honor of Marine Corporal Jason L. Dunham, who posthumously received the Medal of Honor after shielding his fellow Marines from an explosive device in Iraq in April 2004.

His spirit of courage and selflessness lives on in the house that bears his name – and soon, in every engraved name of the memorial that stands in front of it.

"This isn't just about a place to live," Folsom said. "It's about building a community of remembrance and honor – for those who came home and those who never did."

"That mission is very clear now: To honor our fallen, support our wounded and remind our great nation that service and sacrifice should never be forgotten."
