“We are opening up the conversations that usually happen behind closed doors in policing, defense, and intelligence,” said Anthony Tassone, CEO/co-founder of TRULEO. “TruEnough isn’t just another podcast; it’s a front-row seat to how the latest tactics and technologies are being deployed to transform public safety.”

Episode 1: Matt Griffin, U.S. Navy Veteran, undercover agent, author

The show's first episode features Matt Griffin, who before becoming an undercover agent, served as a Navy rescue swimmer, trained to save lives in the most extreme conditions. He later took those skills into some of the most dangerous corners of law enforcement, living undercover and confronting life-or-death moments most could never imagine. Off the streets, Matt fought his own private battle, surviving a suicide attempt that reshaped his view of resilience and purpose. With unflinching honesty, he shares raw stories of service, survival, and the true cost of wearing the badge.

Honest, eye-opening, and unforgettable, TruEnough isn't just about crime stories; it's about the people who solve them, the hidden realities they face, the cost of standing between order and chaos.
