

FEDCON released an infographic today outlining the net-positive effects of 'Buy American' initiatives

The research study "Buy American: A New Era of Opportunity" disproves the widespread belief that these policies mainly present obstacles to compliance

TAMPA, FL, UNITED STATES, August 25, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- FEDCON released an infographic today outlining the net-positive effects of 'Buy American' initiatives.

The research study "Buy American: A New Era of Opportunity" disproves the widespread belief that these policies mainly present obstacles to compliance. The analysis demonstrates how these policies boost domestic manufacturing while establishing new business relationships and selecting businesses that maintain U.S.-based supply chains.

The federal procurement market undergoes a distinct transformation according to our research findings. The initial difficulties of adjusting to new compliance and reporting requirements do not outweigh the substantial long-term advantages that contractors gain from implementing these policies according to FEDCON CEO Bradley Egbert. The domestic production trend represents a major market shift which transforms how businesses approach federal sales opportunities.

The report's key findings include:

- The number of contract solicitations for products and services with high domestic content thresholds has increased substantially.

-The U.S. manufacturing sector gains competitive market advantage through its domestic production capabilities which leads to increased contract awards in renewable energy infrastructure technology and other sectors.

-The policies stimulate subcontractors to establish domestic partnerships which fulfill the "Buy American" requirements.
