

Attorney Adam B. Cordover Launches LawyerFI Podcast with First Official Episode on Financial Independence for Lawyers

New podcast empowers lawyers to break free from the billable hour by exploring financial independence strategies, starting with the 4% Rule.

TAMPA, FL, UNITED STATES, August 28, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Internationally recognized Collaborative Family Law attorney and American Bar Association author Adam B. Cordover has officially launched the LawyerFI Podcast, a new platform designed to help lawyers and other high earners reimagine their relationship with work, money, and freedom. The inaugural episode, released today, explores one of the most powerful yet practical concepts in personal finance: the 4% Rule.

LawyerFI Podcast - Equipping Lawyers To Reach Financial Independence

The episode asks a provocative question: What would your life look like if you never had to bill another hour? For lawyers and others accustomed to the relentless demands of the billable hour, the episode provides a fresh perspective on building wealth, designing a career on your own terms, and creating more time for what matters most.

“This podcast is about giving lawyers tools, strategies, and inspiration to pursue freedom—not just in retirement, but throughout their careers.”

Adam Cordover

“Lawyers spend so much of their lives chasing hours and managing stress that we rarely stop to ask what financial independence could mean for us personally,” Cordover said. “This podcast is about giving lawyers tools, strategies, and inspiration to pursue freedom—not just in retirement, but throughout their careers.”

In Episode One, listeners will learn:

- What the 4% Rule is and how it originated from the Trinity Study (1998)

- How to calculate their own financial independence ("FI") number
- Why FI is not about quitting, but about having choices
- Practical resources to start building financial freedom today

The episode also highlights leading financial thinkers such as Wade Pfau, Michael Kitces, and the FIRE (Financial Independence, Retire Early) community, along with practical tools for tracking progress.

The LawyerFI Podcast will continue to feature actionable insights, expert interviews, and strategies tailored specifically for legal professionals and other high earners who want more than just survival in their careers.

The first official episode of the LawyerFI Podcast with Adam B. Cordover is available on all major podcast platforms.
