®, a leading manufacturer of alcohol and location monitoring devices and software, announced today its acquisition of PharmChem, the industry leader in sweat-based drug testing and maker of the FDA-cleared PharmChek® Drugs of Abuse Sweat Patch.

The acquisition adds proven drug-testing capabilities to SCRAM Systems' continuous monitoring portfolio, expanding opportunities to support agencies, treatment programs, and recovery services worldwide. The PharmChek Sweat Patch is the long-standing standard for continuous drug monitoring, and its integration broadens SCRAM Systems' solutions for courts, agencies, and service providers dedicated to improving lives and enhancing public safety through advanced technology and world-class service.

SCRAM Systems*

“This is an opportunity to expand our mission of delivering innovative solutions that improve lives, enhance public safety, and reunite families,” said Kerri Wagner, Chief Revenue Officer of PharmChem. “Together with SCRAM Systems, we will advance the next generation of tools that empower agencies, support recovery, and transform outcomes for the communities we serve.”

The acquisition of PharmChem enables SCRAM Systems to offer the most comprehensive sobriety monitoring portfolio in the industry.

“The PharmChem offerings are a natural complement to our existing technologies that help monitor, treat, and support individuals in community supervision, treatment, and recovery programs,” said Linthwaite. “This acquisition expands our product portfolio, strengthens our market position, and creates valuable synergies for our client base.”

PharmChem employees are transitioning to SCRAM Systems and will be included in the company’s innovative Ownership Works program. PharmChem will be fully integrated into the SCRAM Systems continuous monitoring suite of products.
