A regulatory turning point: end of de minimis

On July 30, 2025, Executive Order 14324 suspended the long-standing de minimis duty-free exemption for parcels entering the United States. Effective August 29, every postal shipment must include duty collection and guaranteed remittance. This change has created an urgent need for postal operators and their technology partners to adapt quickly, ensuring uninterrupted delivery and alignment with CBP rules.

John Farley, CEO of SafePackage™, emphasized:

"With the end of de minimis, postal operators need more than just a quick fix: they need a partner they can rely on. SafePackage™ was built for this exact moment, combining technology and trust to keep global trade moving forward."

SafePackage™ in action: Duty collection and remittance operational

Since early August, SafePackage™ has been working with postal partners, proving that duty collection and remittance are not just concepts but fully functional processes. The system integrates directly into postal networks, automatically calculating, collecting, and remitting duties in real time to CBP.

Key benefits for postal operators include:

- Proven reliability in real-world production with international partners
- Seamless integration with minimal operational disruption
- Accurate processing aligned with CBP requirements
- Uninterrupted delivery for end customers despite the end of de minimis

Choosing the right partner matters

With the end of de minimis, many organizations are moving quickly to secure solutions. But when it comes to duty collection and remittance, choosing a proven and reliable partner makes all the difference. SafePackage™ is tested in real-world operations, certified by CBP, and built on a foundation of accuracy and trust.

Postal operators benefit not only from seamless integration and operational reliability, but also from competitive pricing and the flexibility to work with multiple providers under CBP's framework. This ensures resilience, efficiency, and security as the industry adapts to the new regulatory environment.
