

The Historical Dallas Herald Embarks on a New Mission: Bringing Empowerment Media to Dallas

DALLAS, TX, UNITED STATES, August 29, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- DALLAS, Texas — Established in 1849 as the first newspaper brand in Dallas, the Dallas Herald holds a unique place in the history of American journalism. Today, under new leadership, the historic publication is embracing a bold new mission: to bring empowerment-driven media to Dallas and beyond.

In an era when communities are calling for more uplifting, constructive journalism, the Dallas Herald is being reimagined to serve as both a trusted news source and a cultural platform. Its revitalized focus will highlight stories of innovation, resilience, and leadership across Dallas, while also engaging audiences through events, podcasts, and multimedia initiatives.

Every neighborhood, every family, every small business deserves to see themselves in the news—not as an afterthought, but as the heart of the story.”

Dallas Herald

“This is about honoring the legacy of one of Dallas’s earliest news voices while shaping a modern vision for the future of media,” said a spokesperson for the new ownership team. “The Herald will not only deliver credible reporting but also inspire and empower the community it serves.”

The Dallas Herald’s expansion includes coverage of business innovation, cultural highlights, education, civic engagement, and local leadership. In addition to digital news, the brand will introduce live events and podcast programming designed to amplify positive voices and create conversations that matter.

With its heritage as Dallas’s first newspaper brand, the Herald now repositions itself as a forward-looking institution—one that brings empowerment, dialogue, and progress to the heart of North Texas.

About the Dallas Herald

Founded in 1849, the Dallas Herald was the first newspaper brand in Dallas. Revived under new leadership, the Herald is committed to empowerment-driven journalism that reflects Dallas's neighborhoods, addresses civic trade-offs with clarity, and highlights community assets alongside citywide challenges.
