"By offering a streamlined program, we help graduates begin their careers without the burden of student debt while meeting the growing demand for medical assistants in our community," said Holly Capuano, Longview Medical Assistant School Program Manager.

Students in Longview Medical Assistant School's program learn through onsite labs at a local partner clinic and complete an externship under the supervision of experienced healthcare providers. This model ensures that students not only gain essential clinical and administrative skills, but also graduate with the confidence to succeed in real medical environments.

The program emphasizes affordability and accessibility. Flexible tuition options are available, allowing students to save thousands compared to traditional college programs. Graduates finish their training in just a few months, ready to pursue work in clinics, physician offices, and hospitals across the Longview region.

The curriculum covers anatomy and physiology, medical terminology, patient care, and laboratory procedures, as well as vital administrative skills such as billing, coding, and maintaining electronic health records. This comprehensive training gives students the foundation needed to step directly into the healthcare workforce.

“It’s an honor to bring this opportunity to Longview,” said Chris Lofton, CEO of Zollege. “We believe education should be practical, affordable, and directly tied to career success—and this program is a reflection of that mission.”

Once certified, graduates of Longview Medical Assistant School will be prepared to seek positions in a variety of healthcare settings throughout East Texas. Learn more about the program and how to enroll here. Space is limited.
