What is an Employer of Record?

An Employer of Record, often shortened to EOR, is a service provider that legally employs staff on behalf of another company in a foreign country. The EOR handles contracts, payroll, benefits, taxes, and compliance with local labor laws, while the client company directs the employee's day-to-day activities. This business model allows organizations to expand internationally while reducing legal and administrative risk. More details are explained in the full guide at EORService.nl.

Quick Recommendations for 2025

Cost-effective global hiring with strong support: Remofirst

Affordable payroll and compliance across 140+ currencies: Oyster HR

Wide-reaching compliance expertise in 150+ countries: Deel

Key Findings from the 2025 Report

Compliance is the top factor in selecting an EOR. Providers with strong local expertise scored highest on reducing legal risk.

Transparent pricing improves adoption. Hidden fees were a significant barrier to implementation in 2024.

HR integrations make a difference. Platforms that connect with HRIS and payroll systems reduce errors and streamline reporting.

Global support matters. Providers offering service in the client's time zone see higher user satisfaction and retention.
