agencies often struggle with financial management. One major hurdle is accurately tracking ad spend allocation across platforms like Google, Meta, and LinkedIn, which can quickly spiral without centralized oversight. Managing contractor and influencer payments across various projects adds another layer of complexity, especially when timelines and deliverables vary.

Delays in client invoicing—particularly under retainer or milestone-based models—further disrupt cash flow and forecasting. Many agencies also face difficulties in monitoring revenue against production costs in real time, making it hard to assess profitability on a project-by-project basis. On top of that, monthly reconciliation of campaign-specific expenses often becomes a tedious, manual process, stretching internal resources thin. Together, these challenges lead to reporting lags and financial blind spots that can undermine operational efficiency and overall profitability.
