She plans to attend law school after graduation. On the field, Crisman is preparing to continue her collegiate playing career after redshirting last season due to an ACL injury. She retains four years of eligibility and remains committed to her athletic development.

“It is an honor to serve on the board of NSA, an organization that is making a real impact by expanding opportunities for girls' soccer," said Crisman. "Under the leadership of founder Jay Gruner, whose vision and commitment to the community are truly inspiring, NSA continues to open doors and create lasting change for young athletes."

NSA Executive Director and Founder Jason T. Gruner added, "Caly is the genesis behind the formation of NSA. She began mentoring my daughter five years ago, and I saw first-hand how powerful it is when women mentor youth girls—it just works. Caly brings not only the perspective of a student-athlete, but also the discipline, leadership, and academic excellence that align perfectly with NSA's mission. We are thrilled to welcome her to the board as we continue building pathways for young female athletes in Southwest Florida."
