

Pretrial Diversion Programs Help Americans Avoid Jail Time—But Most Don't Know They Exist

Executive Treatment Solutions helps people facing criminal charges access diversion programs to avoid jail and change their lives.

LOS ANGELES, CA, UNITED STATES, September 6, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- In the United States,

Most people just want a chance to fix their mistake and move forward.

Diversion gives them that opportunity—if they know where to turn.”

thousands of people face jail time for non-violent, first-time offenses every year—often unaware that there may be a better alternative. Pretrial diversion programs exist across the country to help eligible individuals avoid incarceration by participating in structured treatment and education. Yet despite growing public support for rehabilitation over punishment, many qualified defendants never hear about these options until it's too late.

Executive Treatment Solutions (ETS), a national provider of court-approved rehabilitation plans, is changing that narrative. By partnering with criminal defense attorneys and individuals directly, ETS acts as a bridge between legal defense and behavioral reform—offering customized, court-friendly recovery plans designed to reduce recidivism and protect futures.

“When someone is charged with a DUI, drug offense, or even theft, the courts often want to see accountability, not just excuses,” the ETS team shares. “Our job is to help clients show—with documentation, progress reports, and real commitment—that they’re doing the work to change.”

ETS’s approach includes therapy, drug and alcohol testing, educational programs, and detailed reporting—creating powerful documentation that helps attorneys advocate for diversion. For example, someone facing a first-time DUI charge may qualify for a diversion program that, if completed, leads to full dismissal of the case. ETS supports this process with their comprehensive DUI Diversion Program, ensuring clients stay compliant, sober, and on track.

Their reach, however, extends well beyond DUIs. ETS works with clients across a range of charges—including theft, simple drug possession, and mental health-related offenses—helping them qualify for state or county diversion under applicable laws. Their Pretrial Diversion Program is tailored to meet various court standards and comes with ongoing support and documentation throughout the case.

While the criminal justice system often lacks the time or resources to promote rehabilitation-first solutions, ETS offers a path built on outcomes, not punishment. Their mission is simple: help clients show the courts they're serious about changing their lives.

"Most people just want a chance to fix their mistake and move forward," the ETS team says. "Diversion gives them that opportunity—if they know where to turn."
