Our clients are seeking seating that blends ergonomic performance with design personality. Offering Herman Miller chairs in diverse colors helps companies align comfort with brand identity.”

premium office furniture, reports a marked shift in enterprise purchasing toward bold, brand-expressive colorways across Herman Miller office chairs. Recent inventory data and client inquiries indicate an accelerated demand for Aeron color variants, such as Cobalt, Garnet, and Emerald, alongside established classics like Carbon and Lead, reflecting a broader 2025 workplace design preference for environments that balance ergonomics with a distinctive visual identity.

Corporate interiors are evolving from uniform grayscale palettes to curated, brand-aligned schemes. Within seating, that has translated into measurable interest in non-neutral finishes that reinforce team identity and spatial zoning while preserving the performance baselines expected of Herman Miller’s task seating portfolio. Madison Seating’s current Herman Miller assortment shows multiple Aeron configurations available in these colorways and finishes, including highly adjustable and PostureFit variants.

Verified availability and specifications are published on Madison Seating’s Herman Miller brand collection page, which includes the Aeron, Embody, Mirra 2, Sayl, Setu, and associated accessories (headrests, casters, and stools) in new, open-box, pre-owned, and refurbished conditions. While color is doing more work inside corporate design programs, buyers continue to prioritize the core ergonomics that made Herman Miller chairs category leaders. The Aeron Remastered retains its 8Z Pellicle suspension and posture-support architecture, while Embody, Mirra 2, and Sayl address a range of preferences for movement, support, and breathability. Herman Miller has publicly documented ongoing sustainability enhancements to Aeron, including the integration of ocean-bound plastic in select components, aligning aesthetic updates with environmental responsibility.

What Companies Are Choosing

Based on current assortment and buyer requests, Madison Seating observes three emerging use cases for color within seating programs:

- Brand-aligned neighborhoods: Cobalt and Emerald appear in collaboration areas and project rooms to delineate team spaces without architectural build-outs.
- Executive and client-facing zones: Deeper tones, such as Garnet, are used to introduce warmth while maintaining a professional aesthetic.
- Wellbeing and focus areas: Cooler palettes (e.g., Cobalt, Lead) continue to anchor focus rooms where visual noise is minimized.

Critically, these color selections are deployed on top of standardized ergonomic specifications (adjustable arms, lumbar/PostureFit, tilt mechanisms, and casters appropriate to floor type) to ensure consistency in comfort, support, and maintainability across the fleet.
