the unfundable; these are women who have been told “no” by banks, grants, and traditional investors despite building bold, revenue-generating businesses.

“As a former commercial banker, I know firsthand the barriers women face when it comes to accessing capital,” says Erin Sisko. “Most funding systems were never designed with women in mind. They were built for male-dominated industries, asset-heavy models, and those who already had access. The Capital Elle Business Impact Award is here to change that, because no woman should have to build alone.”

With 29 partners—27 of them women-owned businesses—this award has become Canada’s largest collaboration project for women entrepreneurs. Partners have contributed not just logos but real, tangible support in cash, services, and expertise to create lasting impact for women founders nationwide.

Key partners include:
