“Dubai is a magnet for entrepreneurs and investors, making it the perfect base for our startup-first services,” said Paresh Sagar, CEO of aPurple. “Our goal is to give founders in the UAE and GCC the same competitive edge we’ve delivered to 800+ startups worldwide—building investor-ready apps faster, smarter, and more cost-effectively.”

Unlike traditional development firms that cater to enterprises, aPurple focuses exclusively on startups, solopreneurs, and small businesses. From prototype to launch and scale, the company provides everything founders need to move from idea to market—whether it's a mobile app, SaaS platform, clone app, or full-fledged custom solution.

"Founders don't just need code, they need a partner who understands startup challenges," said Mayur Panchal, CTO of aPurple. "With our Dubai office, entrepreneurs now have on-ground access to agile development teams who can help them validate, launch, and scale their digital ventures in record time."

Looking ahead, aPurple plans to expand further across the Gulf, with Saudi Arabia and Qatar identified as the next growth markets.

"The Dubai office is our first step in creating a GCC-wide startup hub," added Mahil Jasani, COO of aPurple. "We want every ambitious founder in the region to know they have a trusted partner who speaks their language and shares their vision for success."
