Tanya Davis-Ezidinma, Women's Growth & Empowerment Coach/ Founder of BRI

Hope in Her Steps and Butterfly of Hope Gala will shine a light on gynecologic cancers while raising funds through the BRI's nonprofit, The Lenelle Foundation for gynecologic cancers, and for ECANA - The Endometrial Cancer Action Network for African Americans and the International Gynecological Cancer Society (IGCS). Gynecologic cancers affect the female reproductive system, including the cervix, ovaries, uterus, vagina, and vulva. Anyone with female reproductive organs is at risk for these cancers. According to the National Cancer Institute, more than 108,000 women in the United States are expected to be diagnosed with gynecological cancer in 2026, and about 32,000 will die from one. Each type of gynecologic cancer carries its own signs, symptoms, and risk factors. Although the factors are different, one commonality is the importance of awareness, early detection, and support. Any woman is at risk, especially as she ages.

“This transformative event is dedicated to raising awareness about gynecological cancers, honoring survivors, and supporting caregivers,” says Tanya Davis-Ezidinma, a Women’s Growth and Empowerment Coach and Founder of BRI, who lost her mother to Uterine Carcinosarcoma in 2024 after a year-long battle. “She was a vibrant, healthy woman in her seventies who brought joy to everyone around her.

Her diagnosis was shocking, and as one of her primary caregivers, I walked alongside her through every appointment, treatment, and hopeful moment—while also navigating my own pregnancy and supporting my college-aged son through personal challenges. These three days will honor her legacy and the strength of caregiving women everywhere.”

This transformative event is dedicated to raising awareness about gynecological cancers, honoring survivors, and supporting caregivers. Together, we move from remembrance to resilience.”

As part of the event, BRI and the Lenelle Foundation will present two $1,000 awards: the Wings of Grace Award to honor a woman from the “sandwich generation” who is caring for a parent with cancer while raising her own family, and the Butterfly Impact Award, to recognize a woman-owned small business in healthcare that is creating lasting waves of support and healing for women impacted by cancer.

“The Butterfly of Hope Gala invites you to join in lighting the way forward—whether through sponsorship or the purchase of individual tickets.” says Davis-Ezidinma. “Your presence and support help uplift voices, expand advocacy, and spark hope for women and families impacted by gynecologic cancers. Together, we move from remembrance to resilience.”

The evening will unite community leaders committed to education, early detection, and healing, and will feature inspiring stories from survivors, caregivers, and community leaders, special recognitions, and meaningful opportunities to contribute to life-saving initiatives. More information on sponsorships and to purchase a table and individual tickets will be on sale at: Hope In Her Steps: <https://648a-administrator.systeme.io/hopeinhersteps>
