Businesses across Texas that perform well on Google may still be invisible to AI-powered search platforms, a trend that is starting to affect companies statewide.

BrandShyp, a San Antonio–based digital marketing agency, says AI search engines like ChatGPT often favor simple, widely used language over nuanced, brand-specific content. This means even companies with strong online visibility can be overlooked by the next generation of search tools.

"We're seeing a clear disconnect," said Shenali Harley, Partner at BrandShyp. "A coworking office space in San Antonio ranked high on Google, but AI search engines completely missed it. Businesses can be doing everything right online and still disappear from AI-powered results."

After applying BrandShyp's Generative SEO Framework — which restructures content for AI understanding and signals credibility — that coworking space began appearing in AI search results, generating new inquiries and memberships.

The agency warns this issue affects a wide range of Texas businesses, from coworking spaces to healthcare providers and local service companies. Traditional SEO success no longer guarantees visibility in AI search unless content and data are optimized for these platforms.

How Businesses Can Adapt
BrandShyp recommends three practical strategies for companies seeking AI visibility:

Rewrite content for AI comprehension — Make it easy for AI to answer questions about your business.

Add structured data — Include behind-the-scenes info on your site so AI recognizes your business as credible.

Map your knowledge — Connect your company's expertise into AI systems so your business becomes a trusted source for answers.

"AI search is rewriting the rules," said Justice Harker, Founder of BrandShyp. "Companies that don't adapt will be invisible to the next generation of searchers, even if they dominate Google rankings. Generative SEO ensures your business can be found and trusted by AI, turning AI visibility into tangible ROI."
