What Are The Factors Driving The Halal Empty Capsules Market?

The halal empty capsules market is projected to grow due to the increasing demand for dietary supplements. These consumable products are specially designed to provide nutrients or other beneficial compounds that a person's regular diet may be lacking or not sufficiently providing. As awareness of preventive healthcare grows, so does the usage of dietary supplements, as individuals aim to enhance nutrition and curb the risk of chronic diseases. Halal empty capsules aid dietary supplements by presenting a permissible and plant-based choice that adheres to religious and ethical dietary standards. For example, HerbalGram, a nonprofit organization based in the US, reported in September 2024 that the total annual sales of herbal dietary supplements in the US surged from $12.018 billion in 2022 to $12.551 billion in 2023, a growth of 4.4%. Consequently, the increasing demand for dietary supplements fuels the expansion of the halal empty capsules market.

What Are The Prominent Trends In The Halal Empty Capsules Market?

Major enterprises in the halal empty capsules market are concentrating on creating innovative solutions such as plant-derived, plasticizer-free premixes to improve product safety, adhere to halal compliance norms, and attract health-conscious customers. A plasticizer-free premix, derived from plants, is a clean-label formulation that is used for the production of halal-compliant empty capsules without the use of chemical plasticizers. For example, Roquette Frères, a food enterprise headquartered in France, launched Lycagel Flex, a pioneering plant-based capsule solution, in May 2024. This solution empowers manufacturers with the flexibility to tailor-make formulations, enable swift processing (5-minute degassing), and produce robust, stable capsules that do not stick or leak, even after prolonged storage. It's designed to deliver a high-performance vegan alternative to gelatin capsules for nutraceutical and pharmaceutical uses while catering to multiple consumer and production requirements.
