idebit Instant Payment is First instance of a FedNow Service Provider as Additional Sending Point for Banks

SEATTLE, WA, UNITED STATES,
September 11, 2025 /

EINPresswire.com/ -- Interactive Financial recently facilitated an instant payment transaction via its Idebit® platform, resulting in the first instance of a FedNow service provider acting as an Additional Sending Point for its banking partner, Bank of New Hampshire.

This milestone underscores the choice financial institutions have when it comes to connecting to more than one service provider to send instant payments to fit unique business goals.

The first “Additional Sender “On Us” transaction was sent by Interactive Financials’ banking partner for the School Savings initiative, a financial literacy program that teaches children to save by accepting their saving deposits at school.

Interactive Financial is pioneering the next wave of FedNow Service “Additional Sender On Us” transactions through its Idebit offering, a mobile payment technology born from its 40 years of experience providing Authorized Sending Point transactions via ACH.

"Interactive Financial has demonstrated a commitment to innovation by being the first to enable a second ‘send point’ for its banking partner, underscoring the flexibility financial institutions have on the FedNow Service,” said Erik Van Bramer, head of Customer and Industry relations for Federal Reserve Financial Services. “Instant payments are transforming the way transactions are made in the United States, and we are grateful to service providers for their critical role in advancing this important effort.”

Nation's First Instant School Savers!

Interactive Financial is offering the Idebit® solution to banks and credit unions across the country. "Financial institutions seeking a streamlined API protocol employing FedNow instant payments can utilize Idebit", added Sherry Avena, CEO of Interactive Financial.
