IUOE representatives will deliver an in-depth overview of the union’s industry-leading training programs, which equip operating engineers with the skills needed to adapt to rapidly evolving technologies in energy, construction, and heavy equipment operation. These programs address workforce readiness, safety, and the integration of emerging tools such as artificial intelligence into modern energy infrastructure development.

The IUOE is currently recruiting workers to learn the skill needed to take advantage of the substantial opportunities afforded in AI data center development.

“The demand for highly skilled operating engineers continues to grow as technology and infrastructure needs intersect in new ways,” said Jason Baker, Pipeline Director IUOE Local 18.

“We are proud to share how our training programs not only strengthen the skillset of our members, but also provide essential support for industries embracing cutting-edge solutions like AI in energy applications.”

Participants in the presentation will gain insights into:

- The IUOE’s state-of-the-art training centers and apprenticeships
- Advanced simulation technology for heavy equipment operation
- Workforce strategies for supporting AI adoption in the energy sector
- Safety practices and certifications ensuring jobsite excellence

The AI Energy Conference brings together thought leaders, innovators, and industry professionals to explore the intersection of artificial intelligence and energy. IUOE’s participation underscores its longstanding commitment to preparing workers for the future of energy and infrastructure while ensuring that skilled labor remains at the heart of technological advancement.
