"Time Messenger" by F. Jay Falone

In this story, Air Force Colonel Jenks joins physicists Dominick Costa and Maria D'Luce in a classified program whose equations seem to fold time. Unlike any before, they are called to send critically important messages sixty-five million years into the past to a benevolent species called the Tarsi, whose fate may intertwine with humanity's future. What starts as a test of science soon evolves into a contest with sacrifice and duty, along with the great gamble of altering history.

Hollywood Book Reviews described "Time Messenger" as a "gripping science fiction odyssey where secrets are measured in centuries and every delivery could mean salvation... or extinction." Reviewer Jennifer Bailey praised Falone's immersive storytelling, compelling characters, and vivid world-building, noting that unlike many sci-fi novels, "Time Messenger" carries a warmth that makes it both relatable and thought-provoking.

With equal measures of scientific precision and haunting emotion, Falone demonstrates that all high-tech ventures are ultimately acts of human courage and choice.

Residing in Massachusetts with his wife Christine and their children, Mekala and Nicholas, F. Jay Falone draws inspiration from family life and personal reflection, grounding his imaginative storytelling in themes of truth, responsibility, and the enduring human spirit.

Available on Amazon and any other online book retailers, "Time Messenger" offers readers a rare blend of scientific rigor and page-turning suspense.
