From the Back Cover:

How would one describe Izabel Graham? You wouldn't. It's impossible. She is so much more than you see. So much more than you think she is. So much more than she thinks she is. She has spent her life coloring outside the lines and stepping out of the boxes of society, and this nonconformity has come with a heavy price. This includes being unexpectedly fired from a job that was woven into her identity and had given her a sense of purpose and self-worth. Once the cord that was tethering her to a toxic yet comfortable and complacent reality was cut, Izzy found herself free falling and in dire need of being rescued. The plot twist of her life would come in the unexpected ways that she found herself being saved.

This is one American girl's story of losing love, losing herself, and eventually returning to love in a society full of injustices. It is a story of choosing light over darkness, forgiveness over hate, beauty over destruction, grace over anger, and compassion over division. It is a story of finding one's inner rhythms and learning from the rhythms surrounding us, found in the music we share and the people that we love, and realizing that what makes us different is minuscule next to what makes us the same. We hurt, love, laugh, and bleed the same. We are all one race: the human one.
