“Selling a family business is about much more than a transaction — it’s about finding someone who will treat your life’s work with the same care and commitment you have,” said Greg Martell, Vice President of NAB. “We chose Aldora because they understand that legacy matters, people matter, and customers matter. “Marc Martell, President, added, “Aldora’s family-centric approach and knowing that NAB will have a long-term future in Clearfield (Pa). gave us confidence that our folks and customers would thrive, allowing us to transition the business to a company that shares our values."

"We are very proud to have helped the Martell family (NAB) secure a transition of their family legacy to Aldora. From the moment we met Founder and CEO Leon Silverstein and his team, their extraordinary passion and knowledge of the industry was clear. Leon demonstrated his understanding of not only the business and industry but the responsibility of stewarding what the Martells built to preserve its commitment to employees and the local community," said Scott Mashuda, founding partner of REAG, who represented New Angle Beveling in this transaction.

"What made this transaction particularly rewarding was seeing how the Aldora team immediately understood the operational excellence and cultural value that the Martell family had built over decades," added Jaclyn Ring, Director at REAG. "When you find that perfect cultural alignment between buyer and seller, it creates a foundation for long-term success that goes far beyond the financial metrics."
