Learning Group, a performance-based learning strategy firm serving clients across industries and continents, has been named a finalist for two of the world's most prestigious awards.

TWO SIDES OF THE SAME COIN: PARTNERSHIP AND CULTURE

Some awards honor how a company transforms its clients. Others celebrate how it transforms its own people. This season, Clearpath is being recognized for both.

The Chief Learning Officer (CLO) Learning in Practice Awards named Clearpath a finalist in the Provider Award for Excellence in Partnership category, spotlighting firms that serve as trusted advisors, shaping innovative learning strategies effectively aligned with business goals. Final placements will be announced on October 16.

What matters is that we bring expertise and dedication to the work we do, and that in everything we do, we put people first.”

Jenn Kammerdiener

At the same time, the Stevie® Awards for Women in Business selected Clearpath as a finalist for Best Women-Run Workplace of the Year, 10 or Less Employees. From over 1,500 entries representing 48 nations and territories, Clearpath stands among a select few honored for building a workplace where scale is measured not by headcount but by impact. Gold, Silver, and Bronze will be revealed at the Stevie® Awards gala in New York City on November 10, broadcast live worldwide.

A SMALL FIRM WITH A GLOBAL REACH

“These honors tell our story well,” said Jenn Kammerdiener, Founder & CEO of Clearpath Learning Group. “They show that a small, tightly knit team based in Tennessee can earn recognition across continents, not just for how we partner with clients, but for the culture we’ve built inside our own walls. Size is no barrier. What matters is that we bring expertise and dedication to the work we do, and that in everything we do, we put people first. That means our clients, their people, and our own outstanding team.”

A global partner echoed the sentiment. “We’re continually impressed by the heavy lifting Clearpath’s team takes on. Even with rapidly shifting project priorities, they handle every challenge with grace and the utmost professionalism.”

“What matters most about this recognition is that it’s not just for the work we deliver, but for how we do it,” Kammerdiener continued. “Our commitment is to the results of our programs, but also to the experience of working with us. That’s always been very important to us. You see it in every strategy, every partnership, and every interaction with clients and within our own team, too.”
