In Iran Strikes Back, Iran reaches a breaking point. Faced with mounting economic and political pressure, its leaders debate retaliation: a catastrophic nuclear strike on the United States and Israel, or a more calculated plan to weaken the personal empires of Donald Trump and Benjamin Netanyahu. Cooler heads argue for the latter, assembling an elite team of hackers and strategists to target financial networks, assets, and fortunes instead of innocent civilians. Yet, the looming nuclear threat remains, driven by hardline factions eager for escalation.
