From the Back Cover:

"The Perfect Ten" is a story rooted in a dark secret shared by three high school friends who witness something so sinister that it sparks a pledge of lifelong silence. They meet up again at their 25th high school reunion, where the seed of a second secret is sown. Two of the three are dealing with dire circumstances; one whose wife has been diagnosed with a rare form of cancer and one whose wife has spent him spiraling into an abyss of debt. Desperate for solutions to their problems, they implore the third friend, whose family has mafia connections, to assist them with their venture into the underworld of counterfeit. A fourth friend, a classmate (an unremarkable and unmemorable girl in high school who matured into a stunning beauty) serendipitously joins the trio. The story is fast paced, multi-faceted and spans the coal mines of Pennsylvania, the fashion and finance districts of Manhattan, the U.S. Treasury Department, a granddierite mine in Canada, a manufacturing plant in Hong Kong, and beyond. The characters are genuine and likeable, and you will find yourself compelled to keep turning the pages to find out what happens next.

About the Author:

John Iredale was born in Canada and spent his childhood in Woodstock, Ontario. He earned his doctorate in podiatric medicine in Cleveland, Ohio in 1967. He relocated to Durham, North Carolina where he practiced podiatry for 48 years. Many of his patients, and all his friends and family members, know John as a prolific storyteller. His curiosity led him to get to know many of his patients on a deeper level than most physicians. As a result, he has stories that span generations and every walk of life. He has an uncanny ability to remember details from things he has both seen and experienced. If you have ever shared a conversation with him, you will have heard him say "that reminds me of a story." Retirement has afforded him the opportunity to put to paper some of his favorite stories and experiences.
