

Meet the Sisters of the Valley on Tour in Southern California This Weekend

LOS ANGELES, CA, UNITED STATES, October 7, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Fresh off the launch of Paul Thomas Anderson's acclaimed new film One Battle After Another, the Sisters of the Valley — widely known as the “weed nuns” — are returning to Los Angeles this weekend to meet the budtenders and their customers, to celebrate cannabis culture, and to preview the wellness products they are launching in Los Angeles dispensaries next month.

Filmgoers may recognize the Sisters' unmistakable veils and mission-driven activism from their cameo in the movie. While this upcoming weekend's appearances are not official Warner Bros. events, they offer Angelenos a rare chance to meet the real-life Sisterhood that inspired a scene-stealing moment in the hit film.

All events are open to the public (21+ with valid ID) for the dispensaries, and the outdoor block party in Long Beach called 'The Party on Pine' is open to families with children. Attendees can meet and take photos with the Sisters, learn about their upcoming dispensary-exclusive wellness products, and connect with a movement that combines plant-based healing, social justice, and matriarchal spirituality.

"It was an honor to be participating in such an epic film, and an honor to be an inspiration for the Sisters of the Brave Beaver," said Sister Karina. "The film introduced millions of new people to our mission: blending compassionate activism, small-farm hemp production, and plant-based healing. Now we're inviting the Los Angeles and Long Beach communities to meet us in person and discuss the products we will be launching in Catalyst and Traditional dispensaries next month."

Founded in California's Central Valley, the Sisters of the Valley have become known worldwide for their handcrafted, lab-tested hemp wellness products and for championing women-led, sustainable cannabis culture. Their story — and their distinctive habits — have made them viral icons and, now, part of PTA's cinematic universe.
