

Albert Loftus Unveils The End Of The River — A Haunting Noir Thriller Of Art, Obsession, & Corruption In 1970s New York

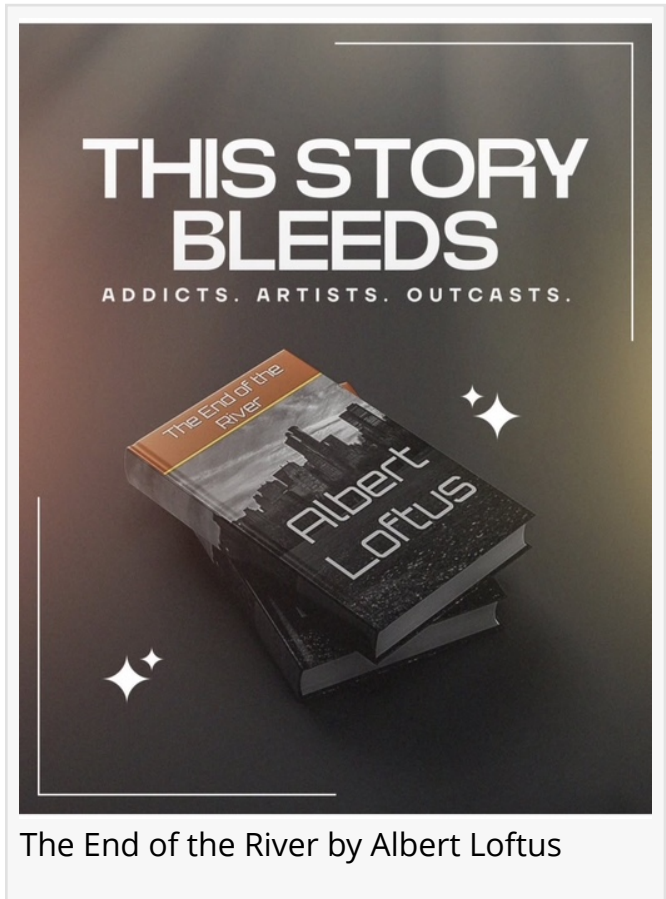

A psychological descent into the shadows of ambition and madness, where the line between creation and destruction is written in blood.

NEW YORK CITY, NY, UNITED STATES, October 7, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Author Albert Loftus captures the grit and darkness of 1970s New York in his chilling new novel, The End of the River (May 1, 2025). Part psychological thriller, part historical crime noir, the novel immerses readers in a world where art, obsession, and corruption collide against the backdrop of Albany's politics and Manhattan's neon-soaked streets.

The story follows a young aspiring writer who falls under the spell of his enigmatic mentor—an eccentric literary editor living in a glass tower. At first, the mentor challenges him to push boundaries, urging him into the underbelly of society in search of authentic stories. But what begins as artistic ambition soon spirals into a web of manipulation, seduction, and menace. As the writer navigates sleazy diners, bohemian subcultures, and political backrooms, he uncovers a chilling truth: the man guiding his pen may also wield a knife.

Loftus's novel goes beyond the conventions of crime fiction. It is a layered exploration of power, predation, and the fragile line between imagination and madness. By blending noir sensibilities with literary ambition, The End of the River forces readers to question not only who the killer might be—but also what it truly means to tell a story.

"I wanted to show how art can be both salvation and destruction," says Loftus. "In the 1970s, New York was a city of contradiction—glamour and decay, ambition and corruption. That tension became the perfect canvas for a story about obsession and the dangerous allure of
