Our mission isn't just to train sleep consultants, but to train great ones—because your success is the reason we do what we do”

Violet Giannone

IPSP-trained sleep consultants have become the industry's gold standard — sought after by parents, featured by major media outlets, and trusted by leading baby brands worldwide.

Setting the Standard for Excellence in Sleep Consulting

Founded in 2014 by Violet Giannone, RN, a three-time published author and registered nurse, the Institute of Pediatric Sleep and Parenting (IPSP®) was among the first institutions to bring structure, evidence-based education, and professional ethics to the field of pediatric sleep consulting — a discipline that has grown exponentially in recent years.

Today, the Institute of Pediatric Sleep and Parenting reviews reflect not only high student satisfaction but also the long-term success of its graduates. Many of the world's most recognized sleep consultants — now featured on NBC, FOX, Forbes, and Good Morning America — began their journey through IPSP's certification programs.

"We wanted to raise the bar for what it means to be a certified sleep consultant," said Giannone. "Our goal has always been to combine science, compassion, and entrepreneurship — giving students everything they need to make a lasting impact on families."

A Reputation Built on Trust, Mentorship, and Results

The Institute of Pediatric Sleep and Parenting reviews consistently highlight three defining pillars of IPSP's success: its expert-led curriculum, personalized mentorship, and strong student outcomes.

Each IPSP instructor is an experienced professional — nurses, licensed clinical social workers, educators with advanced degrees, lactation consultants, and behavior analysts who remain active in the field and guide students personally from enrollment through certification and beyond.

"Such an incredible experience with IPSP," said Andria Gordon, founder of Have Baby Must Sleep. "I've learned so much from Violet and her team and have grown as a consultant year after year. I've built an amazing company, a team of professionals, and a life filled with flexibility and purpose — something I never could have imagined before."

That mentorship-focused model has produced exceptional results. IPSP-trained consultants have gone on to build thriving practices, leave traditional 9–5s, and collaborate with leading baby brands and family wellness organizations worldwide.

Institute of Pediatric Sleep and Parenting Reviews: What Graduates Are Saying

Across independent review sites, social media, and industry directories, IPSP graduates consistently describe their experience as transformative.

Common themes found throughout Institute of Pediatric Sleep and Parenting reviews include:

Academic depth: Students praise the evidence-based curriculum, which covers sleep science, child development, and behavioral psychology with professional rigor.

Mentorship: Graduates frequently credit IPSP's one-on-one guidance and feedback as key to their success.

Business empowerment: The inclusion of marketing, branding, and client management modules equips consultants to launch confident, credible practices.

Community: Alumni describe the IPSP network as "collaborative and uplifting," offering continued connection and career support long after certification.

"IPSP set me up so well to become a sleep consultant," said Kierstin DeRosier, founder of Calming Roots. "The course gave me the structure, mentorship, and confidence I needed to leave the 9-5 grind and create a life where I'm home with my son and doing work that genuinely matters. It was the best decision I've ever made."

From Classrooms to Newsrooms: A Growing Global Presence

The success of IPSP's graduates has extended far beyond the classroom. Certified consultants trained by the Institute have been featured by major media outlets including NBC, FOX, Forbes, and Good Morning America, as well as top parenting platforms and podcasts.

Their expertise has also caught the attention of major baby brands and wellness companies, who regularly collaborate with IPSP-trained professionals for educational partnerships, ambassador roles, and media campaigns.

These public recognitions have helped elevate the field of pediatric sleep consulting as a respected and essential component of early childhood and family wellbeing — while further validating IPSP's position as the trusted training ground for professionals entering the field.

Raising the Bar for Online Professional Education

In a digital landscape filled with unregulated and inconsistent training options, IPSP stands out for its credibility and commitment to high standards.

The Institute adheres to academic best practices and transparent educational ethics — a commitment often mentioned in student testimonials. Its programs are internationally recognized, and its curriculum has been benchmarked against professional continuing-education standards to ensure accuracy, consistency, and measurable outcomes.

"We take great pride in offering a structured, research-driven education," said Giannone. "Students invest their trust in us — and we take that responsibility seriously."

This focus on accountability and excellence has positioned IPSP as the program parents trust and professionals choose when they want the most respected sleep consultant certification available.

Empowering a New Generation of Professionals

The Institute of Pediatric Sleep and Parenting reviews also highlight how the program has helped graduates transition into fulfilling, flexible careers that allow them to support their families while helping others.

Many come from healthcare, education, or childcare backgrounds; others are parents seeking purpose-driven work-from-home opportunities. Regardless of background, students describe the experience as empowering — giving them both the confidence and credentials to build sustainable, values-driven businesses.

“Deciding to leave my teaching and reading specialist position was the scariest thing I’ve ever done,” said Erin Elkins, Mama Bear Sleep Consulting founder. “Getting certified through IPSP was the best choice I’ve ever made. It created a second income to support my family and allowed me to do something that truly makes a difference. The education I continue to receive through IPSP has made me fully confident in helping people.”

Global Reach and Inclusive Education

IPSP’s impact extends across more than 50 countries, reflecting a global commitment to inclusive, culturally aware education. The program welcomes students from all backgrounds and regions, adapting its approach to fit the unique needs of international learners.

This global reach is another reason Institute of Pediatric Sleep and Parenting reviews continue to resonate so strongly. Graduates often share stories of building successful consulting businesses in countries where sleep consulting was previously unknown — effectively pioneering the field in new markets.

“We’ve trained consultants in North America, Europe, Australia, Asia, and beyond,” said Giannone. “Our goal is to make this profession accessible to anyone with a passion for helping families.”

A Legacy of Mentorship and Ongoing Support

While many certification programs end at graduation, IPSP’s commitment continues. Alumni receive lifetime access to updated course materials, continuing-education opportunities, and a thriving professional network.

The Institute also provides marketing templates, job listings, and peer collaboration groups — resources that graduates describe as invaluable in sustaining their long-term success.

This ongoing mentorship culture is a defining feature of IPSP's identity and a frequent theme in Institute of Pediatric Sleep and Parenting reviews, where students cite the sense of belonging and community as one of the program's greatest strengths.

What the Future Holds

As the demand for qualified sleep consultants continues to grow, IPSP remains at the forefront of shaping the industry's future. The Institute is currently expanding its certification offerings to include advanced parent coaching, lactation education, and professional continuing-education credits, designed to help professionals further specialize and meet the evolving needs of modern families.

By maintaining a balance of innovation and integrity, IPSP continues to raise the bar for professional training in the family wellness sector.
