The Advocate Award recognizes an individual, organization, or business that has made a significant contribution to the DDPG or shown support for dietetic professionals. This award highlights those who have championed nutrition as a vital part of diabetes care, acting as a role model and promoting the profession within the diabetes community.

“This honor celebrates Maureen's unwavering commitment to advancing the goals of DDPG and championing the essential role of dietitians in diabetes management,” said Lorena Drago, MS, RDN, CDN, CDCES, Diabetes DPG Chair. “Through years of educational programming and outreach on behalf of various food clients, Maureen has provided DDPG members with evidence-based research and resources that have helped them provide guidance, care and inspiration for their patients with diabetes.”

“We are incredibly proud of Maureen. This honor is a testament to her remarkable talent and tireless dedication, and it is truly a privilege to work alongside someone so deserving of this recognition,” said Stephen McCauley, Founder and President of The Ginger Network. “She is an amazing force in the field of nutrition communications, and we are thrilled to celebrate this well-deserved achievement with her.”

Maureen is an accomplished marketing and communications executive with more than three decades of experience. She currently serves as a Michelin-Star strategist for The Ginger Network, where she applies her extensive experience in food and nutrition communications. Throughout her distinguished career, she has built a diverse expertise spanning consumer marketing, influencer strategies, association communications, and crisis management. Her strategic rigor and persuasive storytelling skills are crucial in translating complex information into compelling messages that resonate with specific audiences.
