Beta-alanine is a non-essential amino acid that plays a critical role in muscle endurance and performance. Unlike most amino acids, it is not used to synthesize proteins. Instead, it combines with L-histidine to form carnosine, a compound stored in skeletal muscles that buffers acid build-up during intense exercise, delaying muscle fatigue.

Improved Endurance: Delays the onset of muscle fatigue, allowing for longer exercise sessions.

Increased Strength and Power: Enhances performance in short, high-intensity activities like weightlifting, sprints, and HIIT.

Enhanced Muscle Mass: Indirectly supports muscle growth by enabling longer, more intense workouts.
